The approved vendors include Centerstone Community Mental Health Center, a Nashville-based mental health care provider; ELU: Counseling, Consulting and Coaching, a Chattanooga-based Christian counseling service; the Helen Ross McNabb Center, a Knoxville-based behavioral health agency; PsychPlus, a Houston-based mental health care provider; and Thrive Therapies Group, a Nashville-based organization that specializes in serving students with disabilities.

One of the biggest changes with the new mental health providers is the introduction of telehealth. On the fact sheet that will be provided to families, all five mental health provider options list telehealth as a potential method of service, and two — PsychPlus and ELU — state that their services will primarily be offered at schools that way.
